The Rails Fall Silent

On Thursday, May 21, a westbound Metrorail Orange Line train heading for Vienna is about to pass under Great Falls Street, out of sight to the left. At this moment parallel I-66 was empty of cars and the train itself was largely empty of passengers. After running one more day on Friday, service west of the Ballston Station in Arlington came to an end for the rest of the summer as Metro performs work on the western ends of the Orange and Silver lines. Read about it in this High Green!
